WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

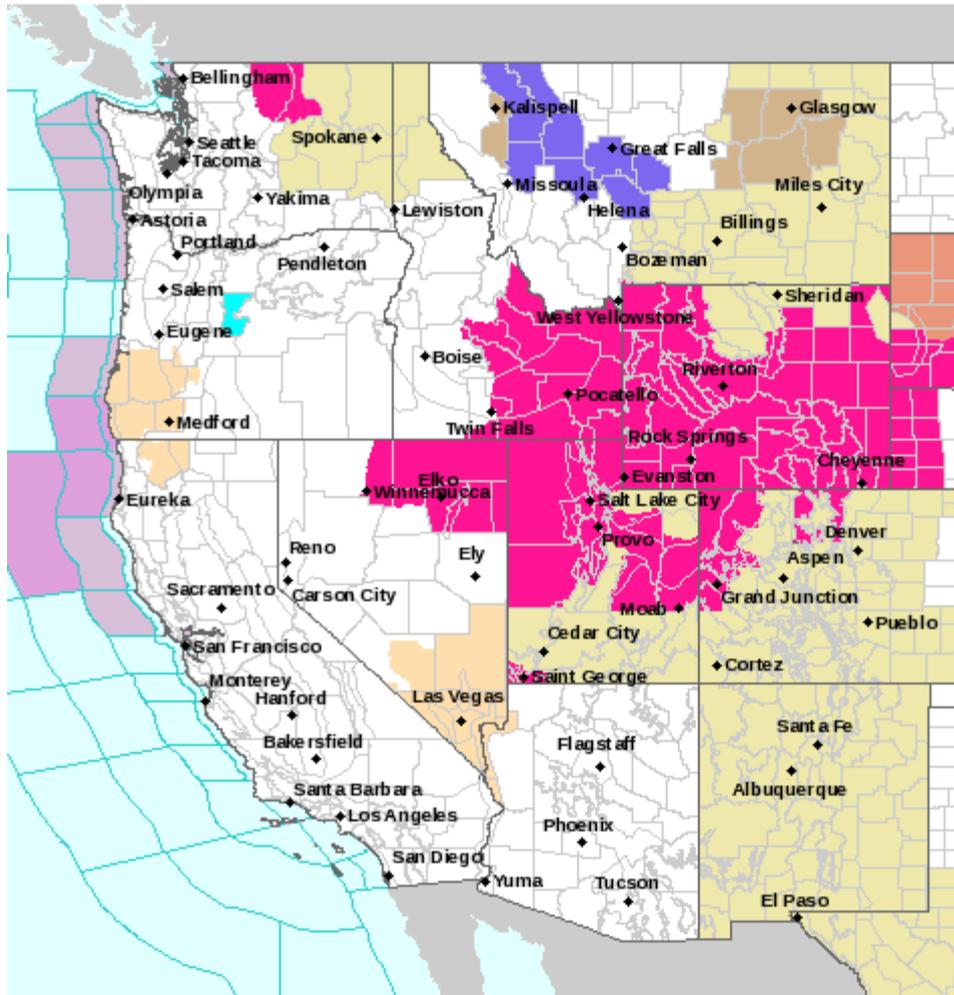

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A major shift in the weather pattern will be underway today as the southern edge of a low pressure trough drops south over Northern California from out of the Pacific Northwest. Conditions should remain sunny. Some gusty afternoon westerly winds (gusts 25-33 mph) and low relative humidity are likely to develop in our eastern areas. A low will cut off from the trough and linger over the Northern California early next week, and this will lead to a chance of isolated showers and late season thunderstorms near and east of the Cascade/Sierra Crest Monday through Tuesday evening. Rather dry north to northeast winds are also expected across the northern areas Monday afternoon into the evening, with local gusts of 25-30 mph possible. A moderate Delta breeze will also be in place Monday with gusts to around 30 mph possible. Temperatures will cool off 5-10 degrees Sunday then be even cooler Monday through Wednesday when the warmest inland areas will be in the 80s. The coolest day will be Tuesday. The low will slowly move east into the Great Basin the latter half of next week and high pressure will take over our weather pattern again, likely with dry, gusty north to northeast winds returning late next week. Afternoon high temperatures will return to quite a bit above normal inland.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A weak area of low pressure off Point Conception will bring isolated afternoon showers and thunderstorms to the Sierra this weekend. Temperatures will remain near normal this weekend, with upper 70s and 80s across the mountains and upper 80s and 90s in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 12% and 25% away from the coastal areas this weekend. A trough dropping south from Canada will bring south to west winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph to the wind prone mountain and desert areas this evening through Tuesday evening. This trough will also cause temperatures to become well below normal, with the warmer valley locations only reaching the low 80s by Tuesday. The marine layer will also become deep by early next week, with morning low clouds and fog making it over the lower coastal mountain slopes. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 15% and 30% above and inland from the marine layer early next week. A warming and drying trend will take place Wednesday through the end of next week as the trough moves eastward.
